In linguistics, a determiner phrase (DP) is a type of phrase posited by some theories of syntax. The head of a DP is a determiner, as opposed to a noun. For example in the phrase the car, the is a determiner and car is a noun; the two combine to form a phrase, and on the DP-analysis, the determiner the is head over the noun car. The existence of DPs is a controversial issue in the study of syntax.

1.1 Information Extraction Architecture. 1.1 shows the architecture for a simple information extraction system. It begins by processing a document using several of the procedures discussed in 3 and 5.: first, the raw text of the document is split into sentences using a sentence segmenter, and each sentence is further subdivided into words using a tokenizer.

7. Extracting Information from Text

7.1 Information Extraction. Information comes in many shapes and sizes. One important form is structured data, where there is a regular and predictable organization of entities and relationships. For example, we might be interested in the relation between companies and locations.

Although some features of German grammar, such as the formation of some of the verb forms, resemble those of English, German grammar differs from that of English in that it has, among other things, cases and gender in nouns and a strict verb-second word order in main clauses. German has retained many of the grammatical distinctions that other Germanic languages have lost in whole or in part.
